Disclaimer:

AVID's digital learning framework is built upon the philosophy of "Learning first, technology second," and, as such, any third-party tools, platforms, or applications discussed or modeled during AVID trainings are selected and used as examples and do not constitute endorsements. Example uses across various digital tools are often reviewed within our trainings and/or resources as options to support blended learning within the classroom. Educators should view these experiences as models of how they should seek out tools to help meet their learning outcomes and the identified purpose for integrating technology. If you choose to use any of the example tools back at a school site, an AVID Technology Checklist (if provided at the training) may be referenced, but AVID is not responsible for any resulting outcomes of such use. The site/district IT department should be consulted to help determine which tools meet the site/district technology standards and policies.
